PUZZLE NEWS

We had a good response to our recent mathematical puzzle with a total of five winners, all of whom are now eligible for the grand prize drawing. The winners were: Carol Adams, Allen Chen, Jim Halverson, Virginia Lightner, and K. Logan Porter. The selected winner for this week's ice cream cone gift certificate is...Jim Halverson! Congratulations.

We here at Duke Medical School can be proud of the fine minds among us, many of which are quite adept at solving Shifting Dullness puzzles. Why not try a new challenge and become a puzzle maker? Submit your puzzles to Andrew Umhau, puzzle editor, Box 2821. There will be a contest for the best puzzle of the year.

AWARDS BANQUET

Last weekend at the Searle Center, Shifting Dullness hosted its annual awards banquet to honor winners in the weekly puzzle contests. The evening's participants, which included this semester's entrants, various members of the faculty, and the newsletter staff, were wined and dined during a multi-media presentation of "Puzzles for the Eighties," prepared by Maxwell Buxbaum, puzzle editor of the New York Times. Following the presentation of awards, the audience listened to this year's keynote speaker, the Hungarian puzzler, Dr. Rubik. His talk, clearly the highlight of the evening, was entitled "Puzzles, Medicine, and You."
