

THE FOURTH ANNUAL
DUKE CONFERENCE ON PHYSICIAN'S ASSISTANTS

APRIL 20-21, 1972

DURHAM HOTEL

THE FOURTH ANNUAL
DUKE PHYSICIAN'S ASSISTANT CONFERENCE

The disparity between the demand for and availability of primary health care services has continued to increase in the past decade. Efforts to remedy this problem have included increasing the number of trained physicians, the utilization of computer technology and the development of new roles for physician's assistants, nurses, and other health workers so that a greater share of the physician's burden can be borne by non-physicians. The latter, though still in the experimental phase, have clearly demonstrated their potential worth.

In recent years a variety of physician's assistants have emerged, and the physician's assistant concept has been the subject of immense interest and extensive publicity. As the first institution to establish a formal program for educating and training the highest level of physician's assistant, Duke University has sponsored annual conferences covering various aspects of this effort in order to share its experiences and learn from the experiences of others. Because of the continued high level of interest, Duke University is sponsoring its fourth annual conference on physician's assistants.
