Medical Center Library News

August 1999

Issue #265

Welcome to Your Gateway to Information!

Pat Thibodeau, Acting Director

The Library staff welcomes our new and returning patrons to the Medical Center and our Library, your gateway to information! We offer the latest in online resources, strong print collections, as well as unique materials in our History of Medicine Collections. This newsletter issue provides you with an overview of the wide variety of resources and services available to you as Duke faculty, staff and students.

Many new resources have been added over the last six months, including more than doubling the number of online journals available. Ninety new titles have been linked through MEDLINE to Journals@Ovid, and access to over 250 journals is now available through the ScienceDirect service from Elsevier. Five more years have been added to the backfiles of the Web of Science database, and MD Consult has been added to provide access to textbooks, practice guidelines, and other resources. I encourage you to check out our Website and use it as your gateway to a variety of online electronic materials including databases, textbooks, clinical tool sets, and Websites.

Computers are also being upgraded throughout the Library. New PCs were installed in the electronic classroom in our Medical Library Education Center (on the lower level of the Library) this spring. The search stations in the reference area have been replaced and support Web interfaces for our databases. The computers in the Reserve Reading Room are scheduled for replacement in August and will include two new iMacs.

However, we are not just high tech! Just outside the electronic classroom, you will find our leisure reading collection, known as the Engel collection, and our display cases where we house exhibits focusing on our historical treasures, Duke authors, current services, and more!

You can also get access to a variety of personalized services by phone, through e-mail, or in person. Our professional librarians are available for consultations on how to search for information and use our resources. The educational calendar in this issue lists the various training sessions we offer; tours and orientations can be arranged for groups and individuals. Staff at all Information and Circulation Desks can assist you in locating materials in our Library. For assistance, please ask at any of the desks.

Again, I welcome you to our Library and hope that you fully use the services and resources available to you.

Medical Center Library Website

We know how busy you are, especially if you're just arriving at Duke. Although we look forward to seeing you in the Library, you can access many of our collections, services, and learning tools through our Website (<http://www.mc.duke.edu/mclibrary/>).

About the Library

Within the About the Library section, you'll find information about the Library, our helpful staff, and everything we provide to you, our users. Information has been compiled from several different sources to create the "Virtual Tour," allowing you to navigate your way around the Library before you ever set foot in the door. Whether you're faculty, staff, or a student at Duke or any other Triangle Research Libraries Network institution, you may follow the "General Information" link to our circulation policies for the different types of items in our collection. The General Information page also provides URLs to the databases and parameters for setting your computer, whether you're accessing our resources via dialup or network connection, telnet or Web browser. Information on all these topics and more is at your fingertips within our General Information page.

Library Services

Need a search or document delivery? Want to learn to search the Web effectively and efficiently? Library Services contains information on what our staff can do for you. We invite you to "make us work" by requesting services quickly and easily over the Web via a drop-down menu: ask reference questions, sign up for classes, join our newsletter mailing list, request searches or document deliveries, suggest that we add a new item to our collections, find out how to request a consult, or most important, comment on how we can improve our Website! If you need a quick summary of who on our staff offers which types of consulting services, check the "Consultation Services" page. Or, if your department needs a computer training facility for an upcoming workshop or class, follow the MLEC link in Library Services to find out how to schedule our classroom.

Resources & Publications

If you're unable to attend the Library's classes, the "Guides and Help" page provides materials developed by our staff on subjects ranging from how to search and evaluate information on the Web to evidence-based medicine. The "Collections" page features lists of our latest acquisitions, by collection, medium, and subject area. If you're looking for reference information, try our "Selected Reference Resources" pages, which include listings for print items in our collections, as well as links to Web-based materials. In addition to a drop-down menu allowing direct access to our most popular databases, Resources and Publications includes a special presence, the History of Medicine Collections.

What's Hot?

In addition to some of the most popular health news sources on the Web, this section of our site features the latest news on what the Library offers to its patrons. What's Hot? changes often, so be sure to visit our main page frequently.

If you have questions or suggestions for improving the design, architecture, servers, or other elements of our site, don't hesitate to contact the Library's co-Webmasters, Scott Garrison (garri002@mc.duke.edu) and Beverly Murphy (murph005@mc.duke.edu).

More Full Text Journals Available

As you can see from the previous pages, the Library has nearly doubled the number of available full text electronic journals:

- ❖ Sixty-seven clinical and 23 nursing titles have been added to those in Ovid MEDLINE and other databases. You can read text of articles in these journals during the course of a search in the Ovid databases (just click on the "Full Text" link in the reference), or you can browse articles in an individual Ovid title -- they are marked with the  logo in the list of e-journals on our Website.
- ❖ Elsevier Science is the largest publisher of biomedical journals. The Library has worked out a joint agreement with the UNC Health Sciences Library to offer to both campuses all of the Elsevier titles to which either subscribes, some 250 on a wide variety of subjects. These can be accessed individually by title from our E-Journals page at <http://www.mc.duke.edu/mclibrary/respub/collections/ejrn.html>. They may also be accessed as a group through Elsevier's ScienceDirect service (<http://www.sciencedirect.com>).

Library Newsletter Electronic Version

As you may have noticed, current issues of Medical Center Library News are available on our Website at <http://www.mc.duke.edu/mclibrary/about/news/index.html>. The electronic version is published around the same time the paper copy gets mailed, so there is no delay in getting the latest Library news. In fact, you can be added to our listserv which notifies you by email when the next issue of the News is available on the Web.

If you would like to have less paper delivered to your office, just fill out the Mailing List Form on our Website (<http://www.mc.duke.edu/mclibrary/about/news/mailform.html>) or return the form which appears on the back page of this issue.

Question: “How do I get access to MEDLINE and the other Ovid databases?”

Answer: Personal Accounts (username and password) are available for Duke faculty, graduate students and DUMC staff and students. Since they are not created automatically, you must apply through the Circulation Desk. For information call 660-1100. Generic Access is also available (no password required), but a user must connect from a machine with a Duke IP (Internet Protocol) address.

Question: “Is it better to have a personal account (a username and password) to access MEDLINE?”

Answer: Yes, if you want to take full advantage of the Ovid system’s special features, such as saving search strategies, ordering copies of articles while searching, or using the SDI autoalert service, which allows you to save a search strategy and have it run automatically and sent to you by email whenever the database is updated. Also, if you wish to do a search via the Telnet version from any location outside of the Medical Center Library, you must have this account. If you are not interested in these special features, you may use the Generic Access.

Question: “When I am at home or away from campus, how do I access IP-restricted resources on the Web such as MD Consult and certain electronic journals and textbooks?”

Answer: Get an “acpub” account from Duke’s Office of Information Technology (OIT). You can then connect to the databases using Duke as an ISP (Internet Service Provider). If you prefer to use a commercial ISP such as AOL or Mindspring, the “acpub” account allows you to connect to OIT’s proxy server, in order to access databases that are restricted to Duke IP addresses. To set up an “acpub” account, contact the Office of Information Technology at 684-2200 or at the North Building.

Question: “I don’t have access to the Internet. How can I use MEDLINE?”

Answer: You can directly dial the MCIS terminal server via your modem and use the Telnet version of MEDLINE (see page 3 for computer settings). You must have a Personal Account to access this database from any site outside the Medical Center Library. Remember, graphics (photos, charts, figures, etc.) in full text articles are not available via Telnet, which is the character-based version of Ovid.

Question: “Are there Telnet versions of resources like MD Consult and Harrison’s Online?”

Answer: No. These resources are Web based and only accessible via the Internet.

Question: “I forgot my password to access MEDLINE. What do I do?”

Answer: Call Circulation Services at 660-1100. They can’t tell you your password, but they can change it or allow you to create a new one. Passwords may be created or changed ONLY via telnet. You cannot create or change your password using the Ovid Web Gateway.

Electronic Reserves

The Medical Center Library has developed an electronic reserves (e-reserves) system that we plan to implement this fall. As we introduce this system, we must also make sure our paper reserves meet all federal copyright laws and guidelines governing reserves. New procedures and policies for submitting items for both electronic and paper reserves will be implemented to ensure that we are in compliance.

Seeking copyright permission is not an easy or inexpensive task. It is often difficult to determine who owns the copyright to a book or journal article, since authors frequently sign over their rights to the publisher. The Library has to contact the publisher for permission, and often there is a royalty fee (ranging from a few dollars to hundreds of dollars for one semester) for using the article for reserves. The Library will be paying a fee to the Copyright Clearance Center for their assistance in locating the copyright holder and paying royalty fees, but it should result in faster processing of permissions for reserves.

Proposals for funding this service are currently in development, including charging a flat processing fee (such as $3.00), and then subsidizing royalty fees up to a certain amount. Once these issues are finalized, information about the new system will be distributed to all faculty. For more information about the new e-reserves system or about the copyright law and guidelines governing reserves, please contact Pat Thibodeau, Acting Director, at 660-1150 or thibo001@mc.duke.edu. The Library's Website will feature more information about our reserves services in August.
